The Ritual is for the use of the Clergy in the administration of other sacraments. The Pontifical contains such offices as only Bishops or Popes may use. Gradual, Antiphonal, and Processional will be naturally interpreted of the musical and other adjuncts of solemn worship which the Church uses so freely, and often with so much effect. But the Breviary differs from all these. It is not designed for any particular, sacrament or ceremony, nor for any particular order of the clergy, and not necessarily for public congregational use at all. But it is a book of devotion and instruction for the daily use of all the clergy. The regulations concerning the use of it are both strict and binding. Whoever enjoys any ecclesiastical revenue, all monks and nuns in any of the regular orders, all Sub-Deacons, Deacons, and Priests, are bound to recite in public or in private the whole daily service, and that under pain of mortal sin. They are not even allowed to omit a single day, though they may read together two or more of the seven or eight portions into which each day s office is divided.
