March of the Poles--Junction with the Imperialists--Ascent of the Kahlenberg--A day of suspense--Scene from the heights--The morning of the battle--Descent into the plain--Advance of So. bieski--Rout of the Turks--Sobieski s entry into Vienna--Charity of Kollonitsch--Behaviour of the emperor--Joy of Europe--Thanksgiving of the Church--End of Kara Mustapha. Sobieski and his army were on the borders of Silesia within a week from their departure from Cracow. His eldest son, Prince James Louis, the youth of many a hope and many a bitter disappointment, marched by the side of his heroic father. His queen accompanied him to the frontier, where they were obliged to separate; and the letters which passed between them during the remainder of the campaign form a singular and most valuable portion of the documentary history of the day. His march revived the hopes of Europe, and the malice of the grand monarque; and whilst the intelligence of the approaching crisis was received in Rome by solemn prayers for the success of the Christian arms, by exposition of the Blessed Sacrament in all the churches, and by processions in all the streets, Louis XIV. could see in it nothing but an opportunity for surprising the Austrian provinces of the Low Country by a coup-de-main: ana Brussels saw a French army at its gates without even a declaration of war. Such are the tactics of that state-policy which the French writers of the succeeding century deplore as so deficient in...
