Not illustrated. 1837 Excerpt: .is no where pretended that any of his successors in religious profession claim for him, or for themselves, that character. On the contrary, they reject the idea with abhorrence and indignation. For them, then, it can be of no benefit; and in a more general view, the effect would probably be to create in the mind a disgust at all profession of religion, and a distrust of it, even under the most favourable appearances. As to the religious belief of the Society of Friends, it does not rest on George Fox, or any other man. Its principles are true or they are false, without reference to the character of any individual member. We doubt, however, whether the annals of any religious Society will furnish the history of a larger proportion of members who have died triumphantly in the faith of Jesus, and made their joyful exit out of time, in the blessed assurance of a glorious immortality through the merits and mediation of their crucified and risen Saviour. The Society has ever solemnly declared its willingness that all its doctrines and practices should be tried, not by George Fox s character, or that of any other member, but by the Holy Scriptures; and could it be proved that he was what his enemies allege, those principles would still be true or false by that standard, independent of him or any one of his coadjutors. If those who have apostatized from the Society can prove its doctrines...
